ITT: We identify every DAICON Reference Anonymous 08/22/24(Thu)09:27:23 No.270168679 >>270168855 >>270168899 >>270168967 >>270181617 >>270194168

It's Daicon III/IV's 41st and 43rd anniversary today! (kinda)
Did you know there is no single complete list of every reference in Daicon IV on the internet?
I thought compiling a list of all the references present in both, no matter how obscure they are, could a fun thread idea and something a little different.
/a/ is the only place on the internet with enough concentrated autism and enough knowledge about japanese children's entertainment from 50 years ago to be up to this challenge.
So I spent around 6 hours going frame-by-frame through the openings and marking every reference I could make out with a number.
All in all I counted 15 references in Daicon III and 432 references in Daicon IV I couldn't name myself. I mostly took care of the very obvious stuff, but left things in where I wasn't sure about the specifics, like a specific model of a speceship for example.
At some point the references became so dense that I started only putting numbers, due to sheer space issues.

The idea of the thread is that I'll post screenshots from the openings, with the references marked with red numbers.
If you think you can identify one of the references, reply to the post with the number of the thing you're identifying and an image of your answer as "proof".
Genral discussion of the Openings, DAICON FILMS' history and further projects, as well as the things they're referencing is also permitted.

uh, Boku no Pico

Anonymous 08/22/24(Thu)09:30:38 No.270168775

All in all Daicon III came out to 31 images, while Daicon IV came out to 139. Combined that's 170 images that I would post myself.
The image limit on /a/ is 300 per thread afaik, the bump limit is at 500, so I'd expect this to to take 2-3 threads.
We have clearer images of some the references, through scans of cels, settei and genga, that can be found on the daicon archives tumblr

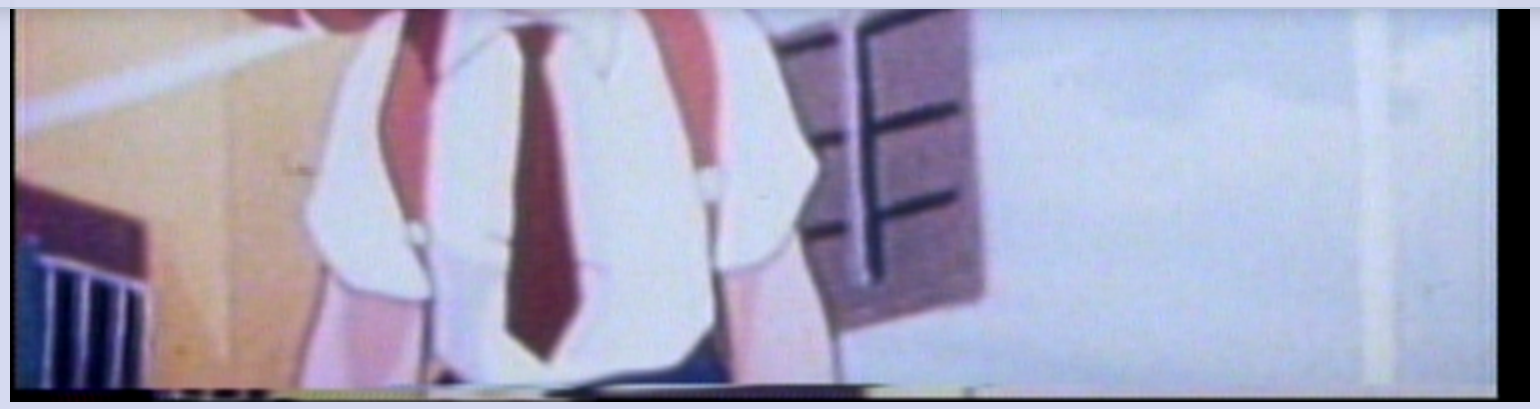

Anonymous 08/22/24(Thu)09:31:39 No.270168806

If you want to take a look ahead of what's been posted in the thread, I put all the images for Daicon IV in an album that can be accessed here:
ibb dot co/album/S7PQmj?sort=date_asc
Please refrain from posting the images in the album to the thread, to avoid double images and so we don't hit the image limit too fast. You can go ahead and post an image of your proof with the number tho.

The uniform the two guys in the VTOL are wearing is also from Ultraman, I however don't know where they are from.
I'm pretty sure I've seen the one if the bansg over the eye before, might be a character by Hideo Azuma?
No Idea about the fat guy tho.

>>270168899
Honestly, probably. All I could find was a very incomplete list by a guy from south africa. However, there's a lot of stuff that could only realistically be seen by going frame-by-frame and in some-cases only by looking at production materials. I thought making one definitive list for the english speaking internet would be cool.

Not exactly a reference, however info about this scene. It's one of Anno's cuts, and a key thing to note, other than the vacuum effect of the smoke is the debris flying across the screen. Not just rubble and smoke like what was typical at the time, but things like desks and paper are included as well. This was part of a radical shift in animation that was taking place in shows like Macross and Megazone 23 around the idea that every building was used for something, and was filled with the tools to carry out that something. Instead of thinking of them as empty set pieces in the background they were given their own purposes and composition, to make debris animation feel all the more realistic.
Anno, and other animators of the time, would give every single bit of rubble, every tiny spark, and small effects a number, and for each number would come up with the direction they would head and their final position in the cut. These could easily number in the hundreds.

The gold thread thing does seem to match somewhat, but it would be weird to take only the hat and not the uniform.
Not that i can think of any other anime with a captain hat similar to that.
I only know for sure it's not Macross captain hat.

The animation of the stormtroopers seems familiar, I feel like I've seen it in the background of a videogame, but considering this came out in the early 80s, that seems impossible. Still, there's something about that movement.

Pretty sure you're onto something, but I don't know ancient fighting games well enough to go digging for which one might have background dudes doing that. If such things even existed before 1983. A quick search says maybe not a fighting game since the genre doesn't seem to exist yet. Maybe some show?

NTA but...
>Who ever started the whole playboy story had nothing to back up their claims.
You're the one making claims here that bunny suits aren't popular because of playboy man. You need a lot of historical evidence to show they were widespread without the playboy bunnies and I don't think that exists. The fact playboy was able to get a trademark means they actually were not considered widespread, as anything too obvious or already in common use can't be used as a trademark. I don't know why you think the trademark not extending to everything, which trademarks don't, means that it's not because of playboy that they're popularized.

That's not how trademarks work and you know it. Apple can't commercialize on Apple fruits. Microsoft can't say Windows is trademarked.ETC, you get the point and the bunny suits you see in anime and games clearly shows Playboy unable to sue anyone for it, not even small time creators on Patron.

I thought of skimming the thread for all teh correct answers and compiling a list with all the answers.
Maybe I should put it somewhere with images too? Like a twitter thread or something?
The idea was to create the closest thing to a definitive list of references on the english-speaking internet, since it straight up doesn't exist yet.

What would be the preferred way to share such a list? Posting on 4chan kinda dooms it to be seen by a few people and eventually be lost to time. I'm kind of a retard, so I'm not sure what would be teh best way to go about compiling and preserving all this info.

The team on twitter you're referring to is called Kineko Video (back then they were still called "Femboy Films"), they did do a raw scan of Daicon III and almost released a cleaned and color-corrected one but they were asked to stop by Daicon Films, which is active again and run by one of teh founbding members. They have an official twitter and seem to have some form of relation to Anno's ATAC:
https://x.com/FilmDaicon
Since then, Daicon FIlms have apparently done new scans of Daicon III and IV, which they've shown at Wonderfest and the Hideaki Anno Exhibition. Diskotek having anything to with it is news to me, there is no way to legally release either Opening anyways.

Keep this thread up in your tab for a little to archive some stuff before it gets 404'd if you can, all this "hard work" definitely shouldn't go to waste

You never claimed such thing. Anyone reading can see you were opposed to the idea of bunny suit being used in anime. You used Google to depict false claims from a website using AI generated data. Not once did it cross your mind to use the trademark office website that i had to provide. You have nothing to prove about bunny suits and only believing in the myth of some rando story you took to be as fact.

Oh my god the bunny suit argument is still going on

Would it be worth making a website to document the references that essentially lets you go through the video frame-by-frame with the annotations on the side?

probably best to just post it everywhere so that if twatter or reddit or your personal website shuts down unexpectedly then you'd have multiple backups of it elsewhere

A website would be good. I've never seen anyone go through Daicon vids frame by frame and try to find out the references before. I think it'll be a worthwhile endeavour, especially since we still haven't found all of the references yet, so other people can take the time and review the footage to find it.

If I were to make one, where would be the best place to let people know about it? A new thread?

New threads probably. Maybe make one on /a/, /m/, and /tv/ if they allow it. Another option would be to advertise on SNS if you have any accounts, but be aware it may bring too much traffic or may be completely forgotten about.
I'm more confident in you making threads because it'll be easier to get direct feedback and update any previously unknown characters. Though both options can work simultaneously if you choose to do so.
